Url links can often change. A doi is an url link that is permanent. Once an article is published in a journal, if you go to that webpage, you can usually find a doi link. Look at our references. Some of them have doi links (including for our documents). A doi link is always better than another url link if we can find one.

There are still several that we could find doi links for.

I copied over Think's updates in the references. I had him do another look to make them uniform.

I accepted all the reference changes. It might be nice to add some doi links for references that are missing them.

No problems. I also just edited the references and had some text changes and comments in the report.

Hi Dustin,

Think told me that references 16 and 17 should be just one reference: they are the same.
